Small Town Gloria Sarasin

“A lump of coal-taking up space,” is how a fourth-grade nun describes ten-year-old William Chamberlain. Despite his struggle with dyslexia, a precocious and rebellious spirit and labeled dumb, William vows to have money one day; he won’t be poor like his parents.

As he grows into adulthood, nothing, not his lack of education, The Great Depression, World War II, or a bad marriage can deter him from seeking his dream.

William possesses the innocence, naivety, and warmness of heart of a Forest Gump.

This story of William and his family spans nearly three decades.
