Parenting and the Power of Respect P. Lawrence Wright, Elizabeth A. Wright

Disciplining your children doesn't need to be a constant power struggle accompanied by arguments and yelling. It is possible to discipline with love and respect, avoiding the conflict that too often exists. Parenting and the Power of Respect is a non-intimidating, non-violent, motivational system that can be used to influence positive change in the behavior of your children and bring harmony back into your home.

Because it's easy to read, understand, and apply, it won't take long for you to see real results in your children's behavior as they begin responding more willingly and cooperatively. You'll learn that by replacing the concept of reward and punishment with a system of choices and consequences, your children will learn responsibility, while also gaining greater self-confidence and self-esteem.

Put an end to the power struggle in your home and learn to communicate with your children in a positive, loving way that will strengthen your relationships and create a more peaceful life for both you and your children.
