On the fourth of July, fourteen year old Dellia jammed two fingers down her throat, and threw up the slice of patriotic cake she had eaten. In the red and blue swivels of toilet water Dellia saw the cure to her curves. When Dellia turned fifteen, she found relief in the stream of blood that streamed down her skin after she slit her wrist for the first time. Now at sixteen, Dellia refuses to eat, and she will punch anyone in the face if they pry into her business. Unattractive, ravenous, and rude, Dellia has managed to turn herself into any story's antagonist. Despite all this, Dellia Sanchez finds herself in the starring role of her own romantic comedy when she develops her first real crush. In one unfortunate moment of weakness, Dellia's teenage tragedy morphs into the cheesy fantasy she had always feared.
